Sport and Everyday Life

Sport is an important part of life for people of all ages. Many children begin with activities such as gymnastics and athletics to improve strength and coordination. Later, some athletes choose more physical sports like weightlifting, which helps build muscle and discipline.

In competitive sports, each person has a clear role. In baseball, the pitcher throws the ball while the batter tries to hit it. A referee is always present to make sure the game is played fairly. Different sports also need special equipment. For example, a baseball player wears a mitt, and in cricket, the stumps are placed behind the batter.

Winter sports are popular in many countries. Alpine skiing involves racing downhill, while cross-country skiing focuses more on endurance. Today, sport is more inclusive than before. Sports such as ice sledge hockey allow people with disabilities to take part and compete seriously.
