Why You Shouldn't Overshare Personal Information on Social Media Sites

You must have posted things online as teenagers who own social media, from random stuff to informative publications. However, recently, the idea of posting and having a large number of people see it has become somewhat frightening. Many people are unaware that they are oversharing and have difficulty reading their audience. Oversharers are frequently unaware that they have revealed too much until after the act, or they may simply not see it as a problem. If you suspect you're providing TMI (Too Much Information), consider the following important reasons to avoid sharing too much on social media.

You are more likely to be found if you are active on the Internet. Although people say and post things they later forget, these tidbits remain in cyberspace, where they can be seen and shared by everyone. When you post something online, it can stay there indefinitely because people may take screenshots, record it, or save it. I don't believe anyone realizes it will be there indefinitely. I believe they are simply unconcerned. Many people hold the mindset that "what I'm doing is insignificant": "Why should anyone care about this?" I think you should ask someone who has lost a lucrative career opportunity due to a mistakenly posted photo from five years ago. Contrary to popular belief, everything about you on the Internet comes together to create a portrait of your personality. Even if you believe this image does not accurately represent you, the greater the risk of future shame.

Topic: Oversharing Personal Information on Social Media

Oversharing is a scary thing. As a result, you should take a moment to think before posting something to prevent the consequences. A lot of oversharing is done in 'the spur of the moment' situation. You can avoid having too much information about yourself broadcast on the web entirely if you're more cautious about what you say and do online. If you're still tempted, consider using an alias instead of your real identity on social media platforms. It's also important to keep in mind that online information will always be 'out there' in some form or another. As a result, be cautious about the information you can choose to reveal about yourself with the rest of the world.

Social Media & Its Impacts

The increased conflicts and online propaganda on social media recently have raised the negative impacts on society such as violence and conflicts. As for Niekerk's research on social media in 2013, social media was utilized to convey disorders, conflicts and violence, for instance riots in Greece and England. There are a number of factors influencing the conflicts, such as discrimination, political aspect, and marginalization.

Social media is violent. They can be a medium to spread harassment, stalking, and sexual victimization both online and offline. There is limited research to indicate that an increased number of hours on social media correlates directly with aggressive behavior, but there is literature that connects certain types of internet use to increased aggressive behavior. For example, the quality of online exposure may be contributory: youths who perpetrated serious crimes were significantly more likely to have viewed violent online content. Moreover, similar to the way media coverage of suicide can act as a contagion for "copycat" suicides, there is also evidence to and potential for, copycat violence may be increased.

To prevent the great risk of social media, parents and teachers - or any responsible adults - therefore, must do something by explaining the true consequences of violence.

QUESTIONS

...and pointing out how unrealistic it is for people to get away with violent behavior, keeping an eye on the clock, teaching conflict resolution and how to use their words responsibly to stand up for themselves, and others, without throwing a punch, checking out tat-tings and their content like the streaming online videos showcasing very brutal stuff.
