Task 2

Read the text below. For questions (6–10) choose the correct answer (A, B, C or D).

It was a sizzling June day, and Sammy Armstrong couldn't wait to get in the water. The ten-year-old was on a camping trip at McKinney Falls State Park with his mom, Kelley, his dad, Stacey, and his brothers, Ben and Willy.

At around 12 Sammy's mother and little brother Ben dropped the family kayak into Onion Creek, a small local stream, and paddled off. Sammy and Willy accompanied their dad to Upper Falls, which marks the point where Onion Creek drops 12 feet over a rocky ledge. At the top of the waterfall, a pathway crosses the creek bed. Below is a swimming hole, 20 feet deep in some places.

With his father watching from the rocks above, Sammy jumped in. He was a good swimmer—he'd been on the swimming team back in his hometown. Sammy played in the water, eventually pulling himself out of the swimming hole and onto a warm boulder, where he watched a group of children walk through the creek bed above. They were summer campers who were heading back to the visitors' parking lot after a morning hike. Suddenly a tiny five-year-old girl lost her balance and was swept over the edge of the falls.

"A girl went over the waterfall!" Stacey shouted. Sammy caught a glimpse of the girl's dark head as the currents pushed her into the hollow beneath the rocky ledge, hiding her from the crowd above. His father walked toward the edge of the waterfall to try to locate the girl, but Sammy was the one within striking distance. "You have to get her out of there!" Stacey yelled down to him. Sammy was nervous, but "my dad just looked at me, and I understood what I had to do."

Years in the Boy Scouts had taught Sammy never to enter a dangerous situation without an exit strategy. The ten-year-old took a few seconds to consider the situation, then dived in, cutting through the churn of the waterfall. In a few seconds, he was next to the struggling girl. Panicking, she tried to climb on top of him. "I went under for a little bit, then came back up," Sammy says. "I stayed calm, but inside, my heart was beating hard".

Keeping an arm's length away from the girl, he asked her if she could swim. When she said no, Sammy carefully pulled her onto his back and swam around the edge of the waterfall toward the shore. Soon, someone threw a swim float from the bank and pulled both kids from the water. The little girl sprawled on the ground, coughing and too stunned to cry.

When Kelley returned from her kayaking trip with Ben, she saw the crowd gathered near the swimming hole, and her heart sank. Then a woman came up and told her that Sammy had saved a little girl's life. "Sammy says he couldn't do it now," says Kelley. "But I know he could because of who he is."

Now Sammy admits, "When I got in the water, I didn't really think about the consequences."

6. Sammy jumped into the swimming hole
- A while camping near the waterfall.
  - B before kayaking with his mother.
