The Enemy part 4 (IV) – "Surgery"

In this part of the story, Dr. Sadao decides to _____ on the wounded American prisoner despite knowing that helping an enemy is dangerous.

The servants _____ the couple and refuse to help, but Hana supports her husband and prepares the room and the patient for surgery. She washes the man and assists Sadao, even though she feels _____ and afraid.

During the _____, Sadao works with great skill and concentration. When Hana becomes sick and runs outside to retch, he continues alone because stopping would mean the _____.

Although he tells himself that there is no reason for the enemy to live, he still performs the _____carefully and responsibly.
He even calls the wounded man "_____", like his other patients.

Hana returns and helps by giving the anesthetic. While watching the injured man and seeing his scars, she begins to think about war and cruelty and feels sympathy for his suffering. She remembers rumors about _____ Takima who at home beats his wife badly, so how much worse he would treat the prisoners of war.

Sadao successfully removes the bullet and gives medicine to the soldier. In the end, the foreign patient survives, and Sadao admits that the man will _____ despite what he went through.

This situation shows that Sadao's sense of duty as a _____ is stronger than his loyalty to his country.
