On 17 August 2014, there was a special event in my hometown. The mayor held a big competition of Pinang Climbing. This competition was held to celebrate the independence day.

Early in the morning, many people had gathered in the town square. In the middle, there were exactly one hundred poles. Various prizes, such as t-shirts, radios, pans, and bicycles were hung on the top of each pole.

At 10 o'clock, the competition started. Unlike the usual Pinang Climbing competition in which the competitors work individually, this time the competitors worked in teams. There were ten teams in this event. They would compete to get the prizes as many as they could.

The crowd enjoyed watching the teams struggle to reach the top. They yelled and gave applauses every time a successful team grabbed the prizes and dropped them down. It was not an easy job to do because the pole was so slippery. Each pole had been covered with grease. However, all teams had good strategies. At about 12 a.m. nearly all the prizes had been taken away.

It was an exciting experience. I myself cheered my favorite team so loudly that I nearly lost my voice.

The main idea of the fourth paragraph is . . .

- A the competition started at 10 o'clock.
 - B the crowd enjoyed watching the team.
 - C the team successfully grabbed the prizes.
 - D all the prizes had been taken away at about 12 a.m.
- 18 Who held the competition of Pinang Climbing?
- A The team
 - B The crowd
 - C The people
 - D The mayor
- 19 Why were the poles so slippery?
- A There was some grease on them
 - B The poles were covered by prizes
 - C There was some sweat on the poles
 - D The poles were in the town square
