Read the passage and choose the correct answer A, B, C or D for each of the following questions.

When writers attempt to anticipate the future, they often only succeed in providing an explanation of the present. This can be seen in the fantasies produced by science fiction writers in the middle of the twentieth century. Almost nothing has turned out the way that these writers expected. Although they managed to predict intelligent robots, they completely failed to anticipate the development in communications technology that would make them possible. This means that science fiction written before 1980 now seems quite dated. Science fiction writers, it seems, were remarkably slow on the uptake when it came to grasping the extent to which the nature of communication would change.

Instead, the focus was very much on rocket technology and space travel. For they were not to know that the lunar landings, so exciting at the time, would actually lead nowhere. There are no human colonies on the Moon, let alone on Mars, and the idea that people might eventually populate the cosmos seems even less within the possibility now than it did then, despite half a century of rapid technological progress. What's more, scientists have even begun to ridicule the notion, fundamental to much science fiction, that one day we just might encounter intelligent aliens.

Question 36. What is the title of the passage?

- | | |
|-------------------------|-------------------------------------|
| A. Life On The Moon | B. Writers and Science Fiction |
| C. Mars or Moon Fiction | D. Science Fact and Science Fiction |
