Text

Some people know very early what they want to do in life. Others take longer to decide. Many students finish school and still don't know what career they want to choose. Because of that, more and more young people decide to take a gap year before going to university.

During a gap year, students often travel, work or volunteer. Some of them find temporary jobs to earn money, while others join international projects or charity organisations. This experience can help them develop useful skills such as independence, responsibility and communication.

However, not everyone thinks a gap year is a good idea. Some parents worry that their children might lose motivation to study. Others believe that students should continue their education immediately.

In reality, a gap year can be very helpful if it is well planned. Students who use this time wisely often return to education more confident and motivated about their future careers.
