We visited a farm museum last weekend with the school, and we learned how people did things in the past. It was a hard life. In the early mornings they had to milk the cows and feed the other animals. The men also had to for the fire. During the day the women had to – they didn't buy bread from shops – and because they didn't have any washing machines. They had to their own – only rich people could afford to buy clothes from shops. In the evenings they didn't go out to enjoy themselves; they had to . They didn't have any appliances, so there was no television or radio. For transport there were no cars, and everyone had to . There was no electricity either, so they had to and lamps at night. I think I prefer living in the modern world!

So I admit, I've always been a little bit my lovely cousin Kate as she's really beautiful and popular. She's a very calm person and never gets anything – nothing worries her, not even doing exams. In fact the only time that I've seen her cry is when she got losing her favourite necklace. I have to say I did feel quite her, so me and my mum bought her a new one for her birthday. She seemed really what we did and couldn't stop thanking us! Anyway, the reason for this blog entry is because she's just found out she got into a top university so I wanted to say: Kate, we're really you!
