With the world changing so quickly, it is very difficult to make correct predictions about the future. Some people get it right, others get it wrong. Some people, however, are a long way off. Here are a few examples.

(A) ◯ Wilbur Wright, to his brother Orville (1901) In 1901, the Wright brothers tried out their flying machine for the first time but were very disappointed when they didn't succeed. However, two years later, in 1903, they took to the skies and entered the history books. And only 18 years after Wilbur made his prediction, the first non-stop transatlantic flight was made from Newfoundland, Canada to Ireland by Captain John Alcock and Lieutenant Arthur Whitten Brown.

(B) ◯ Darryl Zanuck, film producer, 20th Century Fox (1946) Zanuck played a major role in the Hollywood studio system from 1922 to 1970, but he definitely got it wrong about television. The total number of houses with TV sets in the world is over 1.7 billion. In the USA, there are almost 2,000 TV channels and on average, US adults watch TV for about 3 hours a day.

(C) ◯ Steve Chen, co-founder of YouTube (2005) At the time, Chen was worried about the popularity of his site. Luckily for Chen, he continued with his YouTube idea and almost two years later, on 13 November 2006, he made a lot of money when Google bought YouTube for $1.65 billion. Today, YouTube is the Internet's largest video sharing website. Hundreds of millions of videos are watched every day by people from all around the world.
