

1. READING: “Patient Admission in the Emergency Department”

When a patient arrives at the emergency department, the admission process begins immediately. First, the receptionist asks for personal information such as name, age, and ID number. Then, the nurse calls the patient and takes them to the triage area.

At triage, the nurse checks vital signs, including blood pressure, heart rate, and temperature. The nurse also asks about the patient’s symptoms and medical history. If the patient has severe pain or breathing problems, the medical team acts quickly.

At the moment, a 65-year-old man is waiting in the admission area. He is complaining of chest pain and shortness of breath. The nurse is checking his vital signs, and the doctor is preparing to examine him. The patient is sweating and looks anxious.

Meanwhile, other patients wait in the lobby. Some have minor injuries, while others need urgent care. The administrative staff processes paperwork and updates patient records.

Doctors usually examine patients after triage and decide on the next steps. They may order tests, prescribe medication, or admit the patient to the hospital. Right now, the emergency department is busy, and the staff is working quickly to provide the best care.
