Read the following passage and mark the letter A, B, C or D on your answer sheet to indicate the correct answer to each of the following questions from 31 to 36.

Water puppetry is a unique Vietnamese art form that began in the rice fields of the Red River Delta over a thousand years ago. Farmers created this special type of theater to entertain their communities during festivals and celebrations. The puppets dance on water while hidden performers control them from behind a screen. However, this beautiful tradition is now facing serious challenges.

In the past, almost every village in northern Vietnam had its own water puppet troupe. Young people learned the art from their parents and grandparasses. Performances were common during harvest festivals, Lunar New Year, and other important occasions. The shows told stories about daily life, history, and folk tales that everyone knew and loved. This tradition helped preserve the cultural identity of Vietnamese villages and brought communities together.

Today, fewer young people want to learn water puppetry. Many leave their villages to find jobs in cities, where they can earn more money. The training is long and difficult, and performances don't pay well. Modern entertainment like movies, video games, and social media are more attractive to youth. As older puppet masters pass away, their knowledge and skills disappear with them. The art form that once flourished in hundreds of villages now survives in only a few places, mainly in tourist shows in Hanoi.

Cultural experts are working hard to save this tradition. They organize training programs and try to make performances more interesting for young audiences. Some believe that if water puppetry can adapt to modern times while keeping its traditional spirit, it can survive for future generations.

Question 34: What is the main idea of the passage?

- A. Water puppetry is an ancient Vietnamese tradition that needs modern adaptation to survive.
B. Young people should learn water puppetry to honor their ancestors' cultural heritage.
C. Tourist shows in Hanoi are the only way to keep water puppetry alive today.
D. Water puppetry performances were more popular during harvest festivals than other times.

Question 35: What can be inferred about the current state of water puppetry in Vietnam?

- A. It has completely disappeared from all Vietnamese villages except Hanoi.
B. It is mainly kept alive through tourism rather than traditional village practices.
C. It attracts more young performers now than in the past decades.
D. It has successfully adapted to modern entertainment without losing its traditions.

Question 36: Which statement best reflects the passage's view about saving water puppetry for the future?

- A. It should stay exactly the same, even if fewer people watch it.
B. It will survive naturally because it has existed for over a thousand years.
C. It needs to adapt to modern times while keeping its traditional spirit.
D. It can only be saved if young people stop using social media and games.
