LIVEWORKSHEETS

Jonty, 14, Annabel, 12 and Dominic, 10, live in a four-storey house in an expensive part of London. The house was built by their father, Sean Harper, who is a well-known architect. "I think the house is great," said Annabel. "It's very different from all the other houses in the street, and I like that."

"The kitchen is the best," says Dominic. "At first we had it downstairs but then Dad moved it upstairs. It's really warm and comfortable and we spend lots of time in there. But I'd like to change our bedroom. It's under the ground and not much light comes through.'

There's one thing Jonty would like to change too. "The upstair part of the house is very noisy," he explains. "We have metal stairs, and the sound of people going up and down in the morning wakes me up. Also it hurts a lot when you fall down then because there's no carpet."

The children all say that they like having a dad who is an architect. "It's good fun when he makes houses and then we go and visit them," says Annabel. The worst thing about it is that he often works late at the office and then we don't see him."
