

I am small, bright yellow, and the national symbol of Panama. My color warns others that I am toxic. I live near streams in rainforests.

I am an inhabitant of Panamanian wetlands. My shell has beautiful colors and patterns, and I travel long distances to lay my eggs on beaches.

I am one of the most beautiful birds in the world, with shimmering green feathers and a red chest. The males have very long tails that look like ribbons when we fly.

I move very slowly and spend most of my time hanging from trees. Sometimes my fur looks green because of the algae that grows on it to help me camouflage myself.

I live in the fresh or salt waters of Panama. I am a large, calm mammal; I am called the "sea cow" because I only eat aquatic plants.

I am the largest feline in the Americas. I have rosette-shaped spots on my fur and I am an excellent swimmer. I like to live in the jungle and hunt by leaping alone.
