Andrés Ruzo is a geothermal scientist. He studies heat energy from the Earth – like volcanoes. That means Andrés works in very hot places! He wears clothes to stay safe, not to be _____. Andrés doesn't wear a _____ like a pilot does, but he does wear special clothes. Normally, he wears heavy boots, long trousers and even a special all-in-one _____ to keep him safe from the sharp rocks and incredible heat. It might not _____ cool, but safety is more important for.

Sometimes lighter clothes are safer and more _____. Andrés works at the Boiling River of the Amazon. The water there gets to almost 100°C (212°F), but Andrés wears shorts and sandals! Why? The Amazon is very hot and wet and there are parts of the Boiling River where a wrong step can be deadly. These clothes help keep him dry. Local people also told Andrés to 'use his feet like eyes.' Sandals allow Andrés to use his feet to feel the heat and 'see' hot spots, not step on them.
