As technology advances, the job market is expected to change drastically. Many current jobs may become automated or obsolete, while new jobs in fields like artificial intelligence, renewable energy, and biotechnology will emerge. Skills such as creativity, problem-solving, and emotional intelligence will be in high demand, as they cannot be easily replaced by machines.

Remote work is another trend shaping the future job market. With the rise of communication technologies, many employees will have the option to work from home or anywhere with an internet connection. This shift offers flexibility but also requires individuals to be more self-disciplined and organised.

More people will also start working on short-term jobs instead of having full-time positions. Some will work for themselves, choosing different projects, while others may work for different companies at the same time. This gives workers more freedom, but it also means they may not have a steady income or benefits like health insurance. To succeed, people will need to be adaptable, keep learning new skills and adjusting to different types of work.

Question 31. What is the main idea of the passage?
