Scientists have long studied the connection between sleep and brain function. Studies show that sleep plays a crucial role in memory keeping. When we sleep, our brains organize and store information collected throughout the day. This process, known as organization, helps us recall facts and skills more effectively.

There are different stages of sleep, but deep sleep and REM sleep are particularly important for learning. Deep sleep helps strengthen memories, while REM sleep is linked to problem-solving and creativity. Without enough sleep, students may struggle to focus and retain knowledge.

Moreover, research suggests that not getting enough sleep negatively affects decision-making and controlling emotions. People who sleep fewer than six hours per night often find it harder to handle stress and manage their emotions. This can impact their academic performance and daily interactions.

Experts recommend maintaining a regular sleep schedule and avoiding electronic devices before bedtime. By focusing on good sleep habits, students can improve their learning abilities and overall well-being.

Question 31: What is the main idea of the passage?

A. Effects and solutions for lack of sleep.

Deforestation and Its Impact on Planet Earth

Deforestation is one of the biggest environmental problems on Earth. Every year, millions of trees are cut down for farming, construction, and industry. This leads to the loss of forests, which are home to many animals and plants. (37) _____. Deforestation also reduces the amount of oxygen in the air and increases carbon dioxide, which contributes to climate change. The loss of trees affects the water cycle, making some areas drier and reducing rainfall.

One major example is the Amazon Rainforest, often called the "lungs of the Earth." It produces a large amount of the world's oxygen and supports many species. (38) _____. Many animals, such as jaguars and toucans, lose their homes due to deforestation. In addition, Indigenous communities living in the rainforest suffer as their land is taken away.

To protect our planet, governments and individuals must work together to reduce deforestation. Planting more trees, using recycled materials, and supporting sustainable farming can help slow down the destruction of forests. Large companies should (38) _____. If we do not take action, the damage caused by deforestation will (40) _____. Saving forests means saving the future of our planet.

A. Without trees, soil becomes weaker, causing landslides and floods

B. continue to harm our planet and future generations

C. find environmentally friendly ways to produce goods without harming nature

D. However, illegal logging and land clearing for agriculture have destroyed huge areas of this forest
