The Boy and the Old Guitar

Leo was eleven years old and loved music. Every day after school, he listened to songs on the radio and dreamed of becoming a musician.

One weekend, Leo helped his grandfather clean the attic. While moving some old boxes, he found a dusty guitar hidden in the corner.

"Whose guitar is this?" Leo asked.

His grandfather smiled. "It was mine when I was young," he said. "I used to play it in a band with my friends."

Leo was surprised. He had never seen his grandfather play music before. He picked up the guitar carefully and touched the strings. The sound was not very good because one string was broken, but Leo still felt excited.

The next day, Leo started taking guitar lessons at a music school near his house. At first, practicing was difficult. His fingers hurt, and he made many mistakes. Sometimes he wanted to quit, but his teacher encouraged him to keep trying.

After a few months, Leo became much better at playing guitar. Then his school announced a talent show. Leo was nervous because he had never performed in front of a crowd before.

On the night of the show, Leo walked onto the stage with his grandfather's old guitar. He took a deep breath and began to play. At first he was scared, but soon he relaxed and enjoyed the music.

When the song ended, the audience clapped loudly. Leo smiled proudly, and his grandfather looked very happy.

"That old guitar has music again," his grandfather said.
