Read the following passage about UN women and mark the letter A, B, C, D on your answer sheet to indicate the best answer to each of the following questions from 23 to 30.

As the world continues to bridge societal gaps, the United Nations has positioned itself at the forefront of gender equality through UN Women. Established in 2010, this agency endeavors to empower women and eliminate discrimination by implementing multifaceted strategies. From spearheading grassroots initiatives to advocating for systemic policy changes, UN Women tackles the deeply entrenched gender disparities that permeate societies worldwide.

One pivotal focus of UN Women has been championing economic parity, particularly in regions where patriarchal norms curtail women's access to education and financial independence. Through programs designed to foster entrepreneurial resilience, women in marginalized communities have been equipped with the tools necessary to achieve economic autonomy. However, such efforts are frequently hampered by institutional barriers that perpetuate inequities.

Another core aspect involves amplifying women's voices in governance and leadership. Although there has been incremental progress, women remain woefully underrepresented in decision-making spheres, a phenomenon exacerbated by systemic biases, gender stereotypes, and limited access to political networks. UN Women has sought to address this imbalance by pushing for quotas in parliaments and advocating for policies that dismantle these long-standing hurdles.

Additionally, the agency has been unwavering in its commitment to combating gender-based violence (GBV), a scourge that disproportionately impacts women. By leveraging international partnerships, UN Women has spearheaded campaigns to dismantle harmful stereotypes and implement comprehensive protective measures for survivors. However, critics argue that the pace of tangible outcomes has been frustratingly sluggish, leaving many to question the efficacy of such initiatives.

Despite these challenges, the achievements of UN Women are noteworthy. Reports indicate that its programs have lifted millions of women out of poverty and contributed to shattering the glass ceiling in traditionally male-dominated industries.

Read the following passage and mark the letter A, B, C, or D on your answer sheet to indicate the correct answer to each question from 31 to 40.

[I] Humans have traditionally been omnivores, with a diet of both meat and vegetables. But lately, it seems we've become a society of meat eaters. [II] Two things explain this: the Earth's population is rising rapidly, and people with higher incomes tend to consume more meat. [III] With the population expected to reach nine billion people around 2050, and with developing countries getting richer, this trend won't stop any time soon. [IV]

If meat production rises to match demand, the consequences could be devastating for the planet. Thirty percent of Earth's entire land surface massive 70 percent of all land available for agricultural use, is used for raising livestock. And more land is required each year as farmers struggle to meet the rising demand, which comes at the cost of rainforests and other valuable land. Reports by FAO show that meat production is responsible for 70 percent of the Amazon deforestation in South America. Large factory farms are also big consumers of energy and cause a lot of pollution. It's clear that our hunger for meat and the way we produce it is not sustainable in the long run.

Fortunately, food scientists have been anticipating this need for change. They are working on some interesting alternatives to current methods of meat production. A group of Dutch scientists is engineering meat that can be grown in laboratories. This involves using cells taken from cows to grow "muscle" that can be mixed with other things to make beef. They say that this process could reduce the amount of energy and land needed to raise cattle by about 40 percent. Other scientists from the United States and China are working to create "meaty" flavors from mushrooms, which could be used to flavor foods. They feel people can detect chemical flavors, and that natural flavors are better for the body.

For now, lab-grown meat is not a threat to traditional farming. Although scientists say that their beef could be ready for testing (and eating) soon, large-scale manufacturing won't be possible for another ten years. It's far too expensive to develop in large quantities - the Dutch team will spend over $200,000 making enough meat for one burger- and not everyone will be keen on the idea of eating lab-grown meat. While the general public isn't quite ready to accept "fake" meat, the day will come when we may not have a choice.

Question 31 [1093306]: Where in paragraph 1 does the following sentence best fit?

According to the United Nations' Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO), global demand for meat has increased by over 500 percent in the past 50 years.

- A. [I]
- B. [II]
- C. [III]
- D. [IV]

Question 32 [1093307]: What is one consequence of the rising demand for meat production mentioned in the passage?

- A. Increased energy efficiency in factories.
- B. The deforestation of the Amazon rainforest.
- C. The reduction of pollution.
- D. The reduction of land used for agriculture.

Question 33 [1093308]: The phrase "comes at the cost of" in paragraph 2 could be best replaced by ____.

- A. involves the sacrifice of
- B. leads to the loss of
- C. results in the degradation of
- D. requires the destruction of

Question 34 [1093309]: The word "which" in paragraph 3 refers to ____.

- A. The scientists from the United States and China
- B. The beef produced by Dutch scientists
- C. The mushrooms used to create meaty flavors
- D. The laboratory-grown meat

Question 35 [1093310]: Which of the following best paraphrases the underlined sentence in paragraph 3?

- A. Cells from cows are grown in laboratories to produce beef, which can be mixed with other things.
- B. The method focuses on using cow muscle cells, which are used to create beef by blending them with additional things.
- C. This technique involves growing beef from cow muscle, which is mixed with additional things for flavor.
- D. Through cultivating muscle from cells taken from cows, beef can be produced by blending it with other things.

Question 36 [1093311]: The word "large-scale" in paragraph 4 is OPPOSITE in meaning to ____.

- A. partial
- B. massive
- C. restricted
- D. decreasing

Question 37 [1093312]: Which of the following best summarizes paragraph 4?

- A. Lab-grown meat is not currently a threat to traditional farming, but it may become more relevant in the future as scientists work to reduce costs and increase public acceptance.
- B. Scientists are working on lab-grown meat, which is currently too expensive to produce in large quantities and not widely accepted by the public.
- C. The public is not yet ready to accept lab-grown meat, which is expensive to produce and will not be available on a large scale for another ten years.
- D. Lab-grown meat is being developed as an alternative to traditional farming, but its high cost and lack of public acceptance are significant barriers.

Question 38 [1093313]: Which of the following statements is NOT TRUE according to the passage?

- A. The rising population and increasing incomes are key factors driving the global demand for meat.
- B. Food scientists are looking for natural flavor alternatives to chemical flavors.
- C. Lab-grown meat requires more resources than traditional livestock farming.
- D. The cost of producing lab-grown meat in large quantities is currently too high.

Question 39 [1093314]: Which of the following can be inferred from the passage?

- A. Laboratory-grown meat could replace traditional farming in the next few years.
- B. The environmental impacts of meat production will eventually force society to embrace lab-grown meat as the primary food source.
- C. Lab-grown meat has the potential to address environmental issues but faces challenges in cost and public acceptance.
- D. Traditional farming methods are the most sustainable way to meet the rising demand for meat.

Question 40 [1093315]: Which of the following best summarizes the passage?

- A. With the world's population increasing and more people achieving higher incomes, the demand for meat is rising, causing greater environmental concerns like deforestation and pollution.
- B. Traditional meat farming is being challenged by new scientific methods like labgrown meat and natural mushroom flavors, offering a more sustainable approach to meet future meat demands.
- C. Scientists are developing lab-grown meat as an alternative to traditional farming methods, which could help reduce the environmental impact of meat production.
- D. The rising global population and wealth are driving increased meat consumption, and the traditional methods of meat production are causing environmental damage, but scientists are working on lab-grown meat as a potential solution.
