Section 5: Reading Part A

Read the article. Then read each statement and choose True, False, or No information.

Learning Vocabulary

Many students think grammar is difficult to learn. But vocabulary can be difficult, too. There are a few reasons for this.

Spelling and sound

In English, many words sound different from the way we spell them. Look at the word "architect." We say "arkitect." Why don't we say the "ch" like "cheese"? What about "nationality"? Why don't we spell it like this: "nashonality"? It's difficult, isn't it?

Same and different spellings

Here is another problem. Look at the following two sentences: I can speak English. A can of soda, please. The word "can" in both sentences has a different meaning. But we spell them the same! We pronounce them the same, too! We also have words like "two" and "too." We spell these words in a different way. But we say them in the same way. There are many words like this in English.

Words with the same meanings

How about these sentences? I think English is hard. I think English is difficult. Both sentences mean the same. The words "difficult" and "hard" have the same meaning. We call words like these "synonyms." The English language has many synonyms.

How to learn vocabulary

You can learn new vocabulary by reading a lot. Read about things you like. Try to think about new words. For example, look at the words around the new word. We call this the context. Can the context help you understand the meaning? Then look for the meaning of the word online to see if you got the right meaning. Write the new word in a notepad. Make sentences with the word. This helps you remember the meaning. Write notes about the pronunciation. You can find synonyms of new words online, too. Write these in your notepad. Make new sentences with them. Soon, you will have many new words!
