Against the colourful and vibrant landscape of India, you won't often see the colours black or white. Every colour in India has a special meaning, often connected to culture and religion. Green, for example, symbolises happiness and new beginnings. Black, on the other hand, represents darkness and negativity. It is sometimes used to ward off evil. Small black dots are painted on people's chins, or under their ears to ward off the 'evil eye'. White, too, has different symbolism in India than in the West. After the death of her husband, an Indian widow wears only white. This suggests that she no longer connects to the luxuries of daily life because white represents the 'absence of colour'.
