Learning Body Language

Throughout history people have always communicated with one another not only by (21) but also by movements of the hands and body. It is, however, only in the last few years that these aspects of communication (22) been studied at all widely. This type of communication is regarded as body language or non-verbal communication.

People sometimes wonder if you can learn how body (23) works. It is of course possible to read books on the subject but you also need to (24) time observing people's movements. A railway station is a particularly good place (25) such observation, as here people can be seen openly expressing eagerness, sorrow, delight, impatience and many other human emotions by means of (26)

If you turn down the sound on your television set and try to understand (27) is happening simply by watching the picture you will learn even more about communication (28) words. By turning the sound back up every five minutes or so, it is possible to check how accurate your understanding is.

Having studied the art of body language you will have (29) definite advantage at a boxing party. You will be able to sit on your own for the (30) evening and thoroughly enjoy yourself by both watching and interpreting the body language of all the other people there.

VII. Read the following passage and choose the best answer A, B, C or D.

Today, the Internet is an important part of our lives. It helps people around the world communicate, learn, and have fun. Students use the Internet to find information for their homework or take online courses. Teachers can also use the Internet to prepare lessons or join meetings with other teachers.

In daily life, many people use the Internet to shop, watch movies, and read the news. It saves a lot of time and money. With just a few clicks, you can buy something and have it sent to your house. People also stay in touch with friends and family through social media or video calls.

However, the Internet also has some problems. Some students spend too much time playing games or watching videos instead of studying. Others may see bad information or become victims of cyberbullying. That's why parents and schools need to teach children how to use the Internet safely and wisely.

In short, the Internet is a great tool if we use it in the right way. It can make our lives better, but we must be careful and responsible users.
