

Going to MarrakechJ John#475

Hi! I'm going to Marrakech in Morocco for five days this spring. I'd love some recommendations for things to do and places to see with my family.

You have to go to Jemaa el-Fnaa. It's a big square in the old town where people meet up and watch the street entertainers and storytellers. There are people there all afternoon but it's best to go after sunset because it's cooler then. You can get something to eat in one of the food stalls and then get your picture taken with a snake around your neck!

I'd recommend taking a bicycle tour of the Medina, the old historic part of town. You should book it online in advance so you can choose the best tour for you. They can be expensive but it's worth it because you get to see the places you might not see on your own. Also, the guides know loads of interesting facts and stories about the Medina.

I did a cookery course with my family, which I strongly recommend. It was in a country farmhouse just outside Marrakech. We got to make traditional Moroccan dishes like couscous. There was also a competition where we had to guess spices like black pepper or paprika from their smell! At the end of the morning we were allowed to eat the food we'd prepared.

Shopping for rugs (small decorative carpets) in the Medina is a must! At first I didn't want to go rug shopping because it sounded boring but my parents insisted. It happened to be great fun because you don't just pay what the seller asks. You discuss how much you want to pay until you both agree on a price. I loved it!

I'd suggest going to the Jardin Majorelle just outside the Medina. It's a famous garden that has unusual plants and a bright blue building in the middle. There's also a great café where you can get a cup of tea. I'm sure that after a day or two in the hot and dusty old town, you'll be pleased to spend some time relaxing in the gardens.

You should go on a day trip to the Atlas Mountains. They're only an hour's drive from Marrakech and there are lots of companies that organise tours. You go on a mini-bus to various places of interest in the mountains, such as the Berber villages, where you can see them making the local Argan oil. There are usually plenty of stops to take photos of the amazing scenery.

Personally, I'd recommend going to the Bahia Palace. This building is just incredible. It was designed and built by Moroccan architects in the 19th century and every centimetre has been decorated in some way. You can see the most complex patterns on the walls, floors and ceilings – I spent most of my time just looking up at the ceilings!
