Exercise 1: Reading and listening.

Why Teenagers Love Creating Content Online

Many teenagers today enjoy creating content on social media. Instead of only watching videos, they like making their own. They create short videos, take interesting photos, and share ideas with people around the world. Some teenagers even learn new skills while creating content.

Creating content is more than just entertainment. Many young people use social media to practice photography, video editing, graphic design, and public speaking. These abilities can help them in the future at school or even at work.

However, being online also has challenges. Teenagers sometimes compare themselves to influencers or spend too much time looking at their phones. Experts recommend balancing screen time with sports, hobbies, and spending time with family and friends.

Many successful creators started when they were teenagers. They practiced every day, improved their communication skills, and learned how to solve problems creatively. Their success did not happen overnight but after many months of practice.

Schools are also beginning to include digital skills in their classes. Students learn how to create presentations, edit videos, and communicate responsibly online. These activities prepare them for future careers where technology plays an important role.

In the end, social media can be both positive and negative. The difference depends on how teenagers use it. If they create, learn, and inspire others, social media becomes a powerful tool for personal growth.
