IX. Read the passage and choose the best answer.

John Baker and his family live in a modern, sustainable house. These houses are specially designed to save energy and reduce damage to the environment. They use renewable energy sources like solar panels and wind turbines to generate electricity. This helps reduce pollution and the use of fossil fuels such as coal and gas. The Baker family's home also has energy-saving lights and modern devices that help them use less power and protect the planet.

Their eco-home is located in a quiet countryside area in Scotland, surrounded by trees and green fields. The house is built from recycled materials such as wood and steel, which makes it strong and environmentally friendly. It is well insulated, so it stays warm during the cold winter and cool in the summer without using much energy. One special feature of their house is the rainwater harvesting system. This system collects rainwater from the roof and stores it for daily use, such as watering plants or cleaning.

John's family loves their home because it is comfortable, eco-friendly, and saves money. Living in this house helps them feel closer to nature and teaches them how to live responsibly. They believe that protecting the environment is important for future generations. Their home is a perfect example of how modern technology and nature can work together to create a clean and sustainable lifestyle.
