Clara's trip to Italy

A few years ago, I travelled to Italy for a month. During the first few days, everything felt exciting but also a bit confusing. I didn't speak much Italian, so simple things like ordering food were sometimes difficult.

One evening, I went to a small restaurant near my hotel. I sat down and waited for the waiter, but nobody came. After about ten minutes, I started to feel a bit uncomfortable. In my country, waiters usually come to your table quickly.

Finally, I stood up and went to the counter to ask if I could order. The man behind the counter smiled and told me to sit down again. A few minutes later, a waiter arrived and took my order.

While I was eating, I noticed that people were not asking for the bill. Instead, when they finished, they stood up and walked to the counter to pay. I found this surprising, but I decided to do the same.

At the end of the meal, I left some extra money on the table as a tip. However, when I was leaving, the waiter ran after me and gave it back. He explained that in that area, tipping was not necessary.

I felt a bit embarrassed, but also grateful for the experience. Little by little, I started to understand the local customs better.
