LIVEWORKSHEETS

In Vietnam, there are many interesting customs and traditions. One of the most important celebrations is Tet, the Vietnamese Lunar New Year. Before Tet, families often clean and decorate their houses. They also prepare special food such as banh chung and buy flowers to make their homes more beautiful. During Tet, people usually visit their relatives and friends and wish each other good luck and happiness. Another important tradition is showing respect to older people. Young people often greet older family members politely and listen to their advice. On special occasions, children may give their grandparents small gifts or lucky money. This tradition shows love and respect between different generations. Although customs and traditions can be different from country to country, they have something in common. They help bring people together and make them feel connected to their families and communities. Learning about other cultures is also a good way to understand	A. Travel to other countries. B.
