

The Super Bowl at Grandma's House

I love watching sports, especially football. Every year, my family gets together to watch the Super Bowl at my grandma's house. The Super Bowl is a big game in the United States, and many people watch it with their families and friends.

This year, my friend Tom came to our house for the game. Before the game started, I asked him, "Do you like watching the game at a bar?" He answered, "I hate going to loud bars. I prefer watching the game at home with friends." My grandma likes watching football, so she was very happy to have another guest.

Before the game, Grandma prepared some food. We had chips, sandwiches, and other snacks. Tom likes eating chips, so he was excited. Grandma usually has four or five bags of chips during the Super Bowl. However, after eating some chips, Tom said, "Um, these chips are too salty!" We all laughed.

When the game started, everyone sat in the living room. "I'm excited about the big game!" I said. We watched the players run onto the field. After a few minutes, I asked, "What's the score?" My brother answered, "Our team has twenty points!" Everyone cheered because our team was playing well.

Later, the other team started playing better. The team's fans became excited, and the game became more difficult for our team. Suddenly, our team made a mistake. Grandma stood up and shouted, “Oh no! We can’t lose this game! I know we need three points.” Everyone became quiet and watched the screen carefully.

During the game, we also watched some advertisements on TV. Some of them were funny, and we laughed together. My cousin asked, “Do you always watch the concert?” I answered, “I don’t always watch it, but I love going to concerts and games.”

At the end of the night, we were tired but happy. We enjoyed the food, the game, and spending time together. For my family, watching the Super Bowl is not only about football. It is also a special opportunity to share time with the people we love.
