A BUSY WEEK

Emma is 32 years old and works as a project coordinator for a small technology company. She usually works from home, but she goes to the office twice a week.

Last Monday, Emma had an important meeting with a new client. She prepared her presentation carefully because she wanted to make a good impression. However, while she was presenting the project, her computer suddenly stopped working. Fortunately, she had a printed copy of the presentation, so she continued the meeting without any problems.

After work, Emma went to the supermarket because she needed to buy some food for the week. When she arrived home, she realized that she had forgotten to buy coffee. She was tired, so she decided not to go back to the supermarket.

The next morning, Emma took the train to the office. She was answering some emails when she received a message from her manager. He told her that the client was very happy with her presentation and wanted to work with the company.

Emma felt relieved and very happy. Although the week was stressful, she knew that all her hard work had been worth it.
