A project at the youth club

Read the text. Then answer the questions below.

Last month, a youth club started a project to help its community. A local charity donated broken laptops and cotton jackets. The volunteers wanted to repair the items instead of throwing them away.

At first, one laptop did not work. The students examined it and discovered a problem with its software. They changed the program and tested the laptop. It worked again, so they did not need to buy new hardware.

Other volunteers repaired the jackets. They replaced damaged sleeves and used suitable material. People could try on the jackets to check their size. A health worker also visited the club and encouraged everyone to cut down on salty snacks.

The club published an announcement on its website. Residents could fill in an online form or apply by phone. This helped people who could not use the Internet. By the end of the month, the volunteers had repaired twenty items. They hoped to set up a small company in the future.
