Street theatre

Have you seen street theatre in your town? Street theatre is when entertainers do activities, usually in crowded places, for people to watch. These entertainers often play instruments and sing, but they sometimes do more unusual things like eating fire or riding a bicycle with one wheel.

Robbie does street theatre in London. He started dancing 10 years ago, but started doing street theatre two years ago. He says, 'When I was younger, singing and dancing were my hobbies, so now I do both!' He doesn't feel anxious when he does street theatre. 'The people watching are like friends – they're nice and want to enjoy it.'

People often give money to street entertainers like Robbie. He usually uses a hat to collect it, but now he's using a box because he lost the hat. He is saving the money to go travelling. 'I'm in college now. I want to go to Europe when I'm older, but I'm going to South America next year. I'm visiting Rio de Janeiro because it has lots of street theatre and I want to learn from those entertainers.'

After travelling, Robbie wants to be an actor. He says, 'My dream is to work in a theatre and street theatre is good practice because you need to be comfortable in front of new people'.

His advice if you want to be able to do street theatre is: 'Think of something different to do, so people walking past are interested. And then just practise, practise, practise!'
