Life of a Wild Asian Elephant

The Asian elephant is one of the largest land animals in the world. They live in forests and grasslands across Southeast Asia, including Malaysia. These gentle giants are herbivores, which means they eat only plants, grass, bamboo, leaves, and fruit. An adult elephant can eat up to 150 kilograms of food every single day!

Elephants are very intelligent and social creatures. They live in family groups called herds, led by the oldest female elephant. Elephants use their long trunks to breathe, smell, drink water, and pick up food or objects. They can also use their trunks to communicate and show affection to one another.

Unfortunately, wild elephants face serious threats today. Deforestation and human development are destroying their natural habitats. Many conservation groups are working hard to protect these amazing animals by creating wildlife sanctuaries and protected national parks.

- 10. What type of food do Asian elephants eat?
- A. Small fish and insects
 - B. Plants, leaves, and fruit
 - C. Meat and small animals
- 11. Who leads a herd of Asian elephants?
- A. The largest male elephant
 - B. The youngest elephant
 - C. The oldest female elephant
- 12. Which body part is used by an elephant to drink water and smell?
- A. Its trunk
 - B. Its ears
 - C. Its tail
- 13. Why are wild elephants in danger today?
- A. They do not have enough water to swim.
 - B. Forests are being destroyed by human activities.
 - C. They cannot find other elephants to join their herd.
- 14. What are conservation groups doing to help save elephants?
- A. Training them to perform in shows
 - B. Building wildlife sanctuaries and national parks
 - C. Moving them to city parks and zoos
