All About Sushi

If you ask people about what Japanese people love to eat the most, their answer will definitely be sushi or ramen. Most Malaysians have tried these two types of food.

Sushi can be very versatile because you can have anything on it: meat, vegetables, fish, or even plain old vinegar rice. It is often topped with fresh and raw sushi-grade salmon or tuna, fish roe, tamago (egg), or rolled with cucumbers, crab sticks, carrots and other ingredients. What is sushi-grade? It is raw seafood, normally salmon or tuna, that is safe and clean to eat raw. One of the Japanese people's favourite ingredients is salmon. The red colour and sweetness of raw salmon are hard to beat. People often dip sushi into sweet sushi sauce or eat it with wasabi. Beware, wasabi is spicy!

Sushi often consists of rice wrapped with nori (seaweed), and it can come in different sizes and shapes. There are countless types of sushi, often limited only by our imagination. They also have different names based on the type of sushi, the most popular one being the sushi roll. It is convenient to eat and looks good too! In Japan, sushi can be served as either a starter or a main course. It is not only delicious but healthy.

Questions 15 to 20

Read the texts about the adventures of three different people.

Choose A, B or C which fits each description. Mark the correct answer on your answer sheet.

A — Hakimi	Hello! I would like to share the experience of my first trip high up in the sky in a hot-air balloon. It all happened in Putrajaya! It was really hot inside because of the flame. I sweated a lot in the balloon. When the balloon was high up in the air, I could see many kilometres into the distance. The bird's-eye view of the scenery was breathtaking. I asked the pilot why there wasn't a steering wheel. He replied that he used the wind direction and the speed at different heights to steer the hot-air balloon. How cool!
B — Jia Xin	I'm not a regular mountain climber, but I joined a group and tried my very best to climb Mount Kinabalu. The tour guide asked us to keep our belongings in the lockers before our climb. I only put a water bottle, a bun and a towel in my rucksack. Then, we did some warm-up exercises. Although the journey was tough, I managed to reach Low's Peak. The great feeling of being on the mountain peak made it all worthwhile. It is the most exciting adventure I've ever had!
C — Kumar	Today was really cool! I went to an adventure park with my schoolmates in Taiping. We went there by bus. There were lots of animals in the park. We watched the tigers and one of them roared at me. It was really scary! Then, we went to see how crocodiles eat. It ate a whole chicken within minutes. I managed to take a photo of it with its mouth open. Interestingly, the chicken was still in its mouth! My schoolmates bought souvenirs for their friends. I bought a giraffe keychain for my younger brother because he loves the animal very much.
