

For most of us, our parents are our first role models. From when we are young children, they help us learn how to interact with other people - how to share, how to ask for what we need, and how to disagree without hurting someone. They are inherently interested in us and want us to do well. Furthermore, our parents teach us how to be adults in our society. A mother demonstrates to her daughters how to be a daughter, a woman, a wife, and a mother. Lessons learned from our parents will stay with us throughout our lives.