1. Life in the desert

2. People of the tent

3. Desert traditions

Bedouin people live in the deserts of North Africa and the Middle East. The word Bedouin comes from the Arabic word badawi, which means a person who lives in the desert. Traditional Bedouins don't live in houses. They move around the desert and sleep in tents — they are nomads. In fact, they call themselves 'the people of the tent'.

The original home of the Bedouins was the Arabian Peninsula (where Saudi Arabia is now). But there was very little food and water there, so the Bedouins travelled west to North Africa to look for more.

In the past, Bedouins kept camels, sheep and goats. They didn't ride their camels. They used them to carry things. They walked or they rode Arabian horses.

A traditional Bedouin family usually has more than ten people – three or four adults and a number of children. They live in a tent, or gio, and eat their meals together. When a child is six or seven years old, he or she starts to work with the adults. Nomadic Bedouins often don't go to school.

In the past, all Bedouins were desert nomads. Nowadays, many of them live in houses in villages, towns and cities and aren't nomads. However, these urban Bedouins still follow traditional Bedouin culture. They sing and play music, they do traditional dances and they write and speak beautiful poetry.
