Monika Alson: kart racing driver

§ 1. I drive karts: small racing cars. I started aged 10, and although that's young, I'd already been in a bike-racing club for two years! Another member was into kart racing, and a conversation with her convinced me to have a go. I persuaded my brother to come along. I thought he'd enjoy it – he'd started at the bike club with me, but got bored. Unfortunately, the same happened with karts. I really loved it though, and even spent hours watching kart videos online!

§ 2. Soon, I was asked to enter a competition. It was a big event, with prizes presented by well-known sportspeople. I personally hadn't heard of them, but I was looking forward to taking part. Because I was the youngest competitor there, I was entering for the experience – when I came fourth, I couldn't believe it! Afterwards, there were interviews from sports channels, and I was amazed anyone would want to know so much about me! I got a medal for taking part, but the winner got a huge silver cup!

§ 3. Kart racing is important in my life, and in my family's. If one of my parents is working, the other always comes to watch me compete. Because I'm still at school, I'm very busy. I can cycle to my race training sessions straight after school and still be home to get my homework done because I live close to the kart training track. Then I get to bed so I have enough sleep before being up early, ready to start again. I'm careful I don't get too tired, which means that unfortunately I sometimes have to refuse party invitations from classmates. Hopefully, it'll be worth it, but I don't like doing that.

§ 4. I've got a big race soon. I'm preparing by continuing the gym sessions I've always done, but with extra strength-building classes. I'm seeing benefits already. All tracks are different, and as the one where the race takes place is six hours' drive away, practising there isn't an option. I've seen videos of people racing there. It's not the same, though. Luckily, my coach knows it well, and even won as a new driver there years ago. Hopefully, I'll do the same!
