THE LEGEND OF LAKE TOBA

Long ago, in North Sumatra, there lived a young man named Toba. He was a farmer who lived alone in a small village near a river. One day, after working in his field, he went fishing in the river. He caught a beautiful golden fish and decided to take it home. When Toba arrived home, he was surprised to find that the fish had disappeared. In its place, there was a beautiful woman. The woman explained that she was the golden fish and had been changed into a human. Toba was amazed by her beauty and eventually fell in love with her.

They decided to get married. However, the woman made one condition: Toba must never tell anyone about her past as a fish. Toba agreed to keep the secret, and they lived happily together. Several years later, they had a son named Samosir. He was a kind but sometimes disobedient boy. One day, his mother asked him to take lunch to his father, who was working in the field. On the way, Samosir became hungry and ate most of the food.

When Toba received the lunch box, he discovered that there was very little food left. He became angry and shouted at Samosir, calling him the son of a fish. Toba had broken his promise to his wife. Samosir ran home and told his mother what had happened. His mother was deeply hurt because Toba had revealed her secret. She told Samosir to climb to a nearby hill. Then, she returned to her original form and disappeared.

Suddenly, heavy rain began to fall. Water flooded the village and covered the surrounding land. The flood eventually formed a large lake, while the hill Samosir had climbed became an island in the middle of the lake. Since then, the lake has been known as Lake Toba, and the island is called Samosir Island. The story teaches us to keep our promises, control our anger, and think carefully before saying hurtful words.
