Dear Polly

Last night I got into bed at 10 o'clock as usual. Then (as usual!) my best friend started messaging me to play our favourite action game online. I stopped playing four hours later, but I didn't feel sleepy, so I checked out my Facebook page. My parents went to bed at the same time as me so, of course, they were asleep. I didn't go to sleep until 3 a.m.! I feel tired all day today – it's my best friend's fault!

Henri, 15

Dear Henri

Adults usually need about eight hours sleep a night, which is one hour less than teenagers and four hours less than children. What this means is that you should go to bed about one hour before your parents, not five hours after!

Scientists think that teenagers are getting less sleep than before. Online gaming and social media are a big part of the problem.

When you play games, you get very excited. This means you don't feel sleepy. Also the light in the screen makes your brain think it's daytime.

The easy way to sleep better, of course, is to stop playing these games altogether. But why give them up completely? Speak to your friend and explain that you want to get more sleep. Then agree a time when you can both play. It should be at least two hours before you usually go to bed. Play for an hour. Oh, and leave your phone in the living room!
