Activism

In the weeks leading up to the 2018 Swedish election, Thunberg sat in front of the parliament building with her sign. She wanted the lawmakers entering the building to do something about climate change. The first day of the strike she was alone, but more people joined her as the strike continued. After the election Thunberg returned to school four days a week but still skipped school on Fridays to strike. These were called Fridays for Future. It inspired hundreds of thousands of students around the world to participate in their own Fridays for Future. Students held strikes in many countries, including Belgium, Canada, the United States, the United Kingdom, Finland, Denmark, France, and the Netherlands. 25

Soon after Thunberg began her strike, she received invitations to speak about climate change. She spoke at various United Nations climate events, the World Economic Forum in Davos, Switzerland, the European Parliament, and in front of the legislatures of Italy, France, the United Kingdom, and the United States. Her speeches were collected in a book and published as No One Is Too Small to Make a Difference (2019). In May 2019 Thunberg was named one of Time magazine's Next Generation Leaders. Seven months later, 35 in December, she was named Time's Person of the Year. 40
