Rewrite the introduction to this composition with the correct punctuation

the sun was beaming beautifully up in the sky, i was trudging towards the MRT station while carrying my school bag which weighed like a ton of bricks i still had plenty of time to reach school, i have a bad reputation of being a late comer. as i strolled leisurely towards the elevator i sighed to myself "today i am going to prove my discipline mistress that i can be early too. Little did I know, fate was planning to foil my plans.

Rewrite the conflict to this composition with the correct punctuation while i waited at the mrt platform for my train a lady caught my attention. she was middle-aged carrying a startling crimson red bag. it was one of the designer bags my mother carries. those are expensive. i didn't think much about it and continued waiting for my train. suddenly from my peripheral vision i saw a slender looking man slinking towards her. what i saw next turned my legs to lead. without her noticing he slipped his hand into the crimson red bag and pocketed her wallet. i stood there with my jaws wide open. "what should i do? what should i do?" i Mumbled under my breath. before i knew it, the lady screamed "pickpocket."

Rewrite the climax to this composition with the correct punctuation

I had to Quickly think on my feet before he got away. without hesitation i threw my heavy bag at him. Bull's eye! it hit him smack on his chest. the pickpocket lost his balance and crashed on the ground. the security guards surrounded the man in the nick of time.

Rewrite the conclusion to this composition with the correct punctuation

i am so grateful! the lady thanked me. the pickpocket was handed over to the police. unfortunately i was late to school once again. however when i reached school i was in for a surprise. the discipline mistress learnt about my act of bravery and praised me. i was let off the hook for being late. i learnt good things happen to people who do good. fortune favours the bold.
