

Watch, read and translate:

Gokul was a small village on the bank of river Yamuna. Most of the people of Gokul were cow herds. Nandha Gopal was their chief. Krishna as a baby growing in the house of Yasodha and Nandha Gopal was everything they could have dreamed for in a child.

One day, Yasodha left him playing with his playthings, inside the house and went into the kitchen. He looked around, and walked out of the door, straight into the garden, and play in the mud. When Yasodha came out of the kitchen, she found that Krishna was not to be seen anywhere inside the house. Krishna... You mischevious fellow...

Where are you?

Open your mouth right now.

Aahh...

Yasodha saw the Earth and all the seven seas and the mountains and deserts. She saw the Sun and the moon. She saw the stars in the galaxies stretching endlessly into space. She saw the entire universe. And then he closed his little mouth.

She was struck with fear and wonder. I am actually seeing what is happening before. So this vision must be due to some divine power of my son. Mother Yasodha too forgot the entire incident, and she took the child into the house.
