Oscar Wilde

Oscar Wilde died as a poor man in France in 1900 and his friends could only afford a simple grave for him outside Paris. But twelve years later, enough money was collected and Wilde's remains¹ were moved to the most famous cemetery in Paris. His new grave, with a statue of an angel, both made of white stone, was created by American sculptor Jacob Epstein in 1914. It soon became a magnet for tourists who started to cover the stone with lipstick kisses. Unfortunately, the lipstick sank into the stone and every time it was cleaned, the grave was damaged even more. So, a year ago, French conservationists decided to clean it and keep it safe behind a glass panel. The restored grave was presented on the date of the anniversary of Wilde's death.

A Robbery Story

In 2007, a man broke into Suzie Fronterotta's home in London and stole £1,000 and several pieces of jewellery. To the owner's surprise, she received a package containing the stolen objects three years later. The parcel also included a note with his apology and an explanation saying that ever since he robbed Suzie's house, he had had bad luck, including the death of his wife. So this bad guy, who didn't write his name, decided to change for the better. He also said he would pay back the £1,000 when he earned enough money. Suzie therefore asked the police not to arrest the man if they ever found him.

What Calvin Did for Love

It was in 1972 when Calvin Trillin was in Great Britain organising an international art exhibition. His wife, Alice, was coming to meet him in London for some much-needed relaxation because she had been taking care of her ill parents in New York for some time. Calvin wanted to cheer her up a little and because he knew she liked jazz music very much, he brought her beloved jazz band to the airport. When Alice's flight landed, she stepped right into the beautiful melody of the well known musical "Hello, Dolly!" She laughed and walked arm in arm with her husband towards the baggage area, followed by their personal musicians and singing passengers.

For several weeks Spanish police were looking for many valuable things that had been mysteriously disappearing from bags and suitcases locked inside the luggage compartment of a bus travelling between Girona Airport and Barcelona. After one journey, when some things were missing once again, one of the passengers noticed a rather large suitcase among the others. Police opened it and found a man hidden inside. The man's friend had bought a bus ticket and put the suitcase into the luggage hold. After the bus left the airport, the man got out of the suitcase and opened the other luggage looking for valuables. Before the bus arrived in Barcelona, he zipped himself back into his hiding place.

Blogging in the U.S.

Nowadays, blogging is becoming less popular with young people in the U.S. In December 2013, 28 percent of teenagers kept a blog. But in 2014 the number went down to 15 percent. However, blogs aren't going away. In fact, another study shows that blogging has become more popular for Americans over 30. While Facebook and Twitter are now more popular than blogging for chats with friends, writers who like creating long, philosophical messages choose to blog. It seems 140 characters just aren't enough for everybody.
